

Prospect Triplets Depart for Separate College Experiences

By Evelyn Marshak

"I think I have the sympathy of the other parents I ran into while shopping at Staples and Walmart. The parents are a little frazzled as the beginning of the college year approaches and then they smile at me and say 'wow' you have three to get ready." This is what Nan Commendatore told me on August 21 when I asked her about preparations for sending her triplet boys off to college.

Mike left on Friday, August 25 for the University of Connecticut at Storrs and Joey went along on that trip to help. That Saturday, August 26, Joey left for Stonehill College in Massachusetts and Nick went along on that trip to help move all the food, clothing and linens into Joe's dorm. The family got a short break before having to take Nick to Bentley, also in Mass., on August 29.

"Once I thought I could simply open my linen closet and hand each boy sheets, towels, and toiletries for their dorm rooms. Well, that didn't really work out too well. There were far too many items on their list of "necessities." Many trips to Linens & Things, Walmart, Staples, Filene's, BJ's and Costco finally completed the task.

Then there are the food necessities such as mac and cheese for the microwave, snacks and cases of Gatorade and bottled water to send to college. Nan gave a sigh and said, "Honestly, my living room looks like Christmas is almost here, but there is no tree."

It may look like Christmas, but with no tree in sight, it can only mean that the Commendatore triplets are preparing to depart for their college life. The necessary supplies are shown here in the living room of the Prospect home, all waiting for Mike, Nick and Joe to sort through and take what is needed for school.
